A Fresh Look at Destination Positioning

More now than ever it’s time to challenge conventional wisdom in the world of tourism marketing. May I suggest checking out author and speaker, Andrew Davis, who was the keynote for the annual NC Tourism 365 Conference held in March on the topic of, “Stake your Claim.”

Davis contends that all too often destinations are entirely too generic in positioning their brand. Simply put – if your goal is to be the destination for everyone, in reality it means you’re not for anyone. Instead, determine what your real, authentic connection is with your visitors and then, “stake your claim.”

In our case we proudly position our destination as the “Home of American Golf” and support that claim in numerous ways from the role the area played in the development of golf in America (Donald Ross, Tufts Family, etc.), to hosting many USGA and other major golf events. Then, add testimonials from satisfied guests and other stories about great service and experiences and you have our claim.

This same principle can be applied to your business – what makes you truly unique and how can you substantiate that for your current and future customers and guests?

We’d love to hear from you with your ideas and comments. What’s your claim?

Safe travels.

BITS OF HISTORY
In 1844, John Tyrant Patrick, purchased 772 acres of cleared land from Luther and Mary Speare, and 22 acres, including a millpond, from Peter Blue. The acreage became Pinebluff and the lake, Pinebluff Lake. The town was incorporated in 1899. The intention was to create a winter resort, but that never materialized.
For those interested in tourism marketing and economic development, check out the concepts of Place Making, from Dr. Katherine Loflin and Stake Your Claim, by Andrew Davis. Enlightening and idea-stimulating to be sure.

“The origin of miniature golf, like many things, is difficult to nail down with absolute certainty, but some sources say it goes back to the Ladies Putting Club, not unexpectedly at St. Andrews, Scotland. In the U.S., credit often goes to the Thistle Dhu miniature golf course at Pinehurst, North Carolina, which opened in 1916.” J. Mckee

Mattress Makeovers: Hotels don't Skimp on Sleep

When it comes to hotel room mattresses, designers are considering much more than how soft or firm they are, reports USA Today. These days, they are examining products with pocketed coils, cooling gel foam, memory foam, and moisture-wick fabrics that protect the mattress. They are deciding on height, shape and size. They are testing out a variety of toppers, covers and protectors. It's so important that Fairmont Hotels and Resorts spent 18 months testing out mattresses, which typically last seven to 10 years. "Realistically, it's the one part of room that gets used the most during the guest's stay," said a Fairmont representative. "It has the most potential to have an upside and potential to have a downside if we don't get it right."

Millennials Shape Hotel Food and Beverage Programs

It is no secret within the hotel industry that millennial travelers represent a crucial growth market, and this generation's sensibilities are shaping things like hotel design and technology, but they're heavily influencing hotel food and beverage programs as well, reports SmartBrief. For instance, to appeal to millennial travelers' desires for a connection to the local community, which often translates into a draw towards local and specialty foods, the Arlo hotel in New York stocks guest mini-bars with locally sourced, artisan products. Hotels are increasingly focusing on the unique experiences that their food and beverage offerings can provide, in addition to creating destinations that will attract both hotel guests and foot traffic.
